This capstone research project considers the limits of the freedom of religion in democratic societies for socially controversial religious groups, namely, the Family Federation (formerly known as Unification Church)<sup>1</sup> in the US and Japan. Through a computational analysis of media narratives in the US and Japan, this study argues that the limits of religious freedom are not static legal concepts but are socially constructed boundaries defined by media discourse. Specifically, this research demonstrates that US media framed the Unification Church as a 'cult' threatening individual liberty to justify legal intervention, whereas Japanese media has redefined the Church as a 'political actor' threatening democratic integrity and national sovereignty, through sketching different boundaries for religious freedom in each democratic society.

Adding more details, in the 1970s, US media such as the New York Times accused the Church of conducting “brainwashing,” and shortly after, a political scandal known as Koreagate and the conviction of the founder of the Church, Reverend Sun Myung Moon on September 13, 1983.<sup>2</sup> In Japan, since the assassination of the former Prime Minister in July 8, 2022, motivated by an alleged tie between Mr. Abe and the Church, various media outlets have cast light on the questionable Church’s activities. As a result, on March 25, 2025, the Tokyo district court’s order of dissolution of the Church in Japan.<sup>3</sup> The following analysis will evaluate the attitudes of media outlets before and after the critical points mentioned above, utilizing BERTopic and other open-sourced programs. Sentiment Analysis and Semantic Similarity Analysis will complement the Topic Modeling approach that BERTopic implements. Those tools are available through Python. The language models that accompany analysis were selected to be either trained as

Brief introduction of the Unification Church

Sun Myung Moon, the founder of the religious movement known as Unification Church, born in Pyeongan-do of Korea (now part of North Korea) under the rule of Imperial Japan in 1920. On Easter morning, when he was 15 or 16, Jesus appeared to him while he was in deep prayer on a Korean mountainside. In his vision, Jesus charged him with a divine mission to complete the work of establishing the Kingdom of God on Earth. This divine calling forms the sacred foundation on which the Church built on.<sup>5</sup> The revelation ultimately laid out in the text called Divine Principle (KR: 원리강론; JA:原理講論). The book contains theological frameworks of the Church, and has three core theological understandings. The first one is the Principle of Creation. Based on their theology, God's original and primary purpose for creating the universe was to experience joy, which meant to be realized through a reciprocal relationship of love with humanity. The ideal scenario of God was to see his children, human families, achieve individual perfection, create loving families of their own, and establish a loving dominion over the creation.<sup>6</sup> The second is the Fall of Man. Divine Principle interprets original sin in the Book of Genesis in a unique way. Original sin was not just a disobedience but rather a "misuse of love."<sup>7</sup> The fall of humanity was initiated by a spiritual, illicit sexual relationship between the archangel Lucifer and Eve, followed by a premature physical relationship between Adam and Eve. It corrupted humanity's lineage from God and established a fallen, sinful lineage connected to Satan instead. The third is the Principle of Restoration. Salvation will be achieved when humanity and the world backed to their original, perfect state. Devine Principle explains Jesus originally came as the Messiah to accomplish the restoration. However, Jesus only achieved spiritual salvation to humanity since he was rejected and crucified before he could marry and build a perfect, God-centric family. Therefore physical salvation has been yet to achieved, until "True Parents" Sun Myung Moon and his wife Hak Ja Han came to the Earth.<sup>8</sup> The set of unique theology on Divine Principle highlighting earthly restoration and its inherent anti-atheism, led to the Church's rapid global expansion.

Unification Church, officially named the Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity, founded by Sun Myung Moon in Seoul, South Korea, in 1954.<sup>9</sup> His early years were full of pain. Under the Korean War, North Korean force captured him and sent him to the Hungnam Communist Labor Camp. The imprisonment solidified the anti-communist ideology woven into the Church theology. He was liberated from the camp in October 1950 by United Nations forces and he settled in South Korea.<sup>10</sup> However, his group faced criticism in South Korea too as accusations of practicing "blood sharing" (KR: 피가름/pi karim) rituals which allegedly involved sexual rites to purify followers. As a result, in 1955, Moon was arrested for charges including violation of social order, nevertheless he soon released.<sup>11</sup>

Since 1959, the Church originated its activities in Japan and expanded quickly. A characteristics of the Church activities in Japan was its fundraising method known as "spiritual sales” (JA: 靈感商法/reikan shoho). The Church organized members into small “micro-squads” (JA: マイクロ隊) that commits door-to-door sales selling items such as miniature stone pagodas, personal eals, and ginseng at excessively high prices.<sup>12</sup> It is notable that the sales activities were not presented as fundraising for the Church followers. The Church taught that the sales is one of the spiritual trainings and a necessary act to pay “atonement” for the historical sins of their ancestors and themselves.<sup>13</sup> Founded by Japanese sales, the Church expanded to the US in 1972. Moon declared the US is the new center for God’s providence.

The Church quickly gained public attention in the US through public exposure such as their support for President Richard Nixon during the Watergate scandal in mid-1970s. Moon organized prayer and fast vigils claiming that Nixon was being unfairly persecuted.<sup>14</sup> This period of time in mid-1970s also remarks the intense public opposition to the Church. Concerned family members of the Church follower and former members began to organize and accuse the Church being “destructive cult.”<sup>15</sup> The growing controversy resulted in federal investigations in terms of their “cult” status and political influences. Fraser report revealed that federal agencies surveiled the Church’s activities such as its tax filing, potential violations of labor standards, and its fundraising practices as well as bribes to politicians.<sup>16</sup> The intense governmental scrutiny and public hostility provoked the Church to be conglomerate.

It is not a unique strategy for New Religious Movements seeking operating expenses, public legitimacy and political activities through establishing a network of organizations that are separate from their religious activities.<sup>17, 18</sup> Unification Church founded international network of such groups in a wide range of industries, including academia, politics, media, culture, healthcare, and humanitarian aid (See Table 2). These organizations often operate without advertising their connection to the Church, which allows the Church to engage with influential leaders and institutions.

Despite the efforts outside the religious activities, Unification Church faced criticism for a long time. Former members and family members of the follower often argued that the Church planned and carried out deceptive strategies to recruit new members. Recruiters would not reveal their affiliations with Moon or the Church, but invite potential followers to dinners, workshops or community events so as to appear to be a different group concerning non-religious matters. The teachings based on Divine Principle are introduced to prospective members as they attend the meeting repeatedly. Critics in the US called this recruitment process as “Heavenly Deception.”<sup>19</sup>

Unification Church faced the most severe criticism in the US when the accusation about the Church utilizing “brainwashing” or “mind control” techniques to retain and control its followers since the late 1970s. Based on critics’ accusations, the process of “brainwashing” or “mind control” includes, 1) isolation from family, friends, and outside sources of information such as mass media, 2) deprivation of sleep and food, 3) intense, long lectures and group chanting designed to cause psychological vulnerability and emotional instability, and 4) the breakdown of an individual’s past identity and hindrance of critical thinking abilities.<sup>20</sup> The separation from family and intensive labor, in particular, caused wider social controversies in the States. The Church teachings often imply that parents and family members who were outside the Church as potential threat of “Satanic” influences, intends to take followers away from their divine mission. It results in a deep division among biological families. For followers lost the spiritual tie with their parents, the Church provides the superior alternative to biological parents, Sun Myung Moon and Hak Ja Han as “True Parents” who followers owed their loyalty.<sup>21</sup>

Another controversy came from former member described their life in the Church, including labor with little or no pay. Active followers were often organized into small teams that worked more than 10 hours per day selling flowers, candy or other items on the street to meet demanding daily quota.<sup>22</sup> This practice raised legal concerns regarding the violation of labor laws as members were often working for for-profit businesses that the Church own while being treated as unpaid “volunteers” since it was part of divine mission. In addition, it is noted that their fundraising efforts often took place without the required permits from authorities.<sup>23</sup>

At the same period of time, “spiritual sales” led by the Church caused a social controversy in Japan. Criticism mainly focused on their fundraising practice, but also deceptive recruitment and the breakdown of families. The Church’s fundraising criticized due to its systematical coercing of people to buy expensive goods, often related with “liberation of ancestors,” to solve family misfortunes or health problem.<sup>24</sup> The social impact of “spiritual sales” were so enormous that they led to the formation of the “National Network of Lawyers Against Spiritual Sales” (JA: 全国靈感商法対策弁護士連絡会) in May 1987 to aid victims. The group showed that the Church’s activities had caused billions of Japanese Yen (millions of US Dollars) in financial damages to families who targeted.<sup>25</sup> In addition, during 1980s, specific commercial entities, such as “Three-Treasure Pagoda,” had imported from Korea to Japan and sold by the Church members. It caused accusations that the Church was running a fraudulent business under the name of religion.<sup>26</sup> Other than “spiritual sales,” one of the earliest criticism against the Church happened in 1970. In July 1970, a student named Tatsuo Yamada died after falling from a window at the Church facility. Media reported he was subject to severe physical abuse as “training.”<sup>27</sup> Police investigated the group for negligence and battery, establishing the Church’s public image in Japan as a dangerous group utilized fanatical discipline.<sup>28</sup> Despite that, the Church pushed the campaign for elite college students through “Principle Movement” (JA: 原理運動). Students joined the movement often dropped out of school to devote their resources to the Church.<sup>29</sup> On 1975, parents of the children who joined Principle Movement formed groups such as the “National Liaison Council of Parents of Victims of the Principle Movement.” Such groups accused the Church destroyed parent-child relationship by “stealing” their children. Some of them engaged in “deprogramming,” a forced rescue and persuasion, to take their children back from the Church.<sup>30</sup> The mass weddings, held in Japan since 1969, caused another social concern. The Church let many Japanese women to marry with Korean men from rural areas and experience difficult lives as an atonement for colonial rules.<sup>31</sup> The Church has also caused societal controversies over their attempt to influence politics in both the US and Japan, driven by anti-Communism and conservative ideals based on Divine Principle.

Social controversies of the Church in the 70's U.S. and present Japan

Koreagate was a political scandal revealed in 1977, under President Carter who pledged withdrawal of the US force from South Korea. South Korean Military Regime leader, President Park Chung Hee (1963-1979), utilized Korean intelligence to appeal to US Senators and military personnel through extensive lobbying in favor of maintaining the United Nations Command, mostly fulfilled by the United States Forces Korea.<sup>32</sup> Allegedly, 6 Democrats, 1 independent, and 1 Republican representatives received money or jewelry, and investigated.<sup>33</sup> Sun Myung Moon, a founder of the Unification Church, was convicted and found guilty of tax evasion and conspiracy regarding the Church's political advocacy aligned with the Korean intelligence's mission.<sup>34</sup> The public attention to the Church in the context of Koreagate reached its peak. Nevertheless, the media narrative pictured the Church is a "brainwashing" "cult." This "cult" label fixed more firmly after the mass suicide at Jonestown. Some scholars and Christian leaders later argued that the public understanding of the Church as a "cult" influenced Moon's conviction in the tax evasion case with an unusual weight of criminal punishment, a sign of the violation of Freedom of Religion. It was not a dead end for the Church, but they are facing another wave of challenges today. This time, it is in Japan and South Korea.<sup>35</sup>

In Japan, the Church caught the eye after the assassination of former Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. The assailant's mother was a dedicated member of the Church, and the media figured out that his mother offered more than 100 million yen, which is equivalent to 1 million dollars, in 15 years. The excessive offering characterizes the Church's practices in Japan. In fact, since 1987, there was a series of civil actions against the Church about the resulted in the Supreme Court decision in 2001 that put the Church on the losing end of the cases. Meanwhile, it was obvious that Mr. Abe had maintained a relationship with the Church after the civil case, including the time when he was the Prime Minister.<sup>36</sup> Thus, the assailant targeted him, and the media revealed the long-standing bond between the dominant ruling party, the Liberal Democratic Party, and the Church. While the assailant is still on trial, the Tokyo District Court ordered the dissolution of the Church's religious corporation in March 2025. Although the order has been elevated to the Supreme Court after the Church's immediate appeal, the decision was unusual. The dissolution of the religious corporation has been ordered against two religious organizations before, and in both cases, the targeted religious organizations directly committed criminal activity such as terrorism or fraud.<sup>37</sup>

Two cases from two different times and places allow me to ask a question that the influence and role of media when the court dictates the limits on the freedom of religion. In this paper, I use media as the term that represent newspapers and scholarly works published during the time when the Church actively tested the limits on the freedom of religion and sparked controversies. To answer my question, I hypothesized below;

H1. US media uses terms related to “cult” or “mind control” in relation to the Church more compared to before the Jonestown mass suicide on 1978/11/18.

H2. Sentiment score of articles regarding “cult” or equivalent topic decreases compared to the articles before the Jonestown case.

H3. Japanese newspapers increasingly focus on political ties while decreasing attention towards individual sufferings and reliefs as time goes. In contrast, Japanese scholarly media increases attention to the individual as time goes.

H4. Sentiment score of Japanese media coverage about political collusion is more negative than topics related to religious activities or spiritual sales.

H5. US media tend to show higher semantic similarity between “Freedom of Religion” and “individual rights.” However, Japanese media tend to indicate higher semantic similarity between “Unification Church” and “political” matters, resulting in relatively lower similarity between the Church and individuals.

H6. Japanese media shows the correlation between freedom of religion and non-followers’ interest or public interest compared to US media.

H7. Sentiment score temporarily show positive trend after the legal decision against the Church has made in both US and Japan.

BERTopic, Sentiment Analysis, and Semantic Similarity Analysis will be utilized to analyze and evaluate the hypotheses. Table 1 shows which analysis will be done on the hypotheses.

Hypothesis	Region / Context	Analytical Tool	Description of Expected Result
H1	US (Post-1978)	BERTopic / Word Frequency	Frequency of terms related to "cult" or "mind control" increases significantly after the Jonestown mass suicide.
H2	US (Post-1978)	Sentiment Analysis	Average sentiment score of articles containing "cult" topics decreases compared to the pre-Jonestown period.
H3	Japan (Longitudinal)	BERTopic (Dynamic Topic Modeling)	Newspapers show increasing prevalence of "Political Ties" and decreasing "Individual Suffering" topics over time; Scholarly works show the inverse trend.
H4	Japan (Post-2022)	Sentiment Analysis	Sentiment scores for "Political Collusion" topics are significantly more negative than those for "Religious Activities" or "Spiritual Sales" topics.
H5	Comparative (US vs. Japan)	Semantic Similarity Analysis	US media shows higher similarity between "Freedom of Religion" and "Individual Rights"; Japanese media links "Unification Church" more closely to "Political Matters" than to "Individuals."
H6	Comparative (US vs. Japan)	Semantic Similarity Analysis	Japanese media exhibits higher semantic similarity between "Freedom of Religion" and "Non-followers'/Public Interest" compared to US media.
H7	Comparative	Sentiment Analysis	A temporary positive trend (spike) in sentiment scores is observed immediately following adverse legal decisions, indicating counter-narratives.

Analysis 1: newspapers and scholarly writings from US

To analyze the media narratives, I collected the electronic copies of 270 The New York Times (NYT) articles and 18 The Wall Street Journal (WSJ) articles from 1959 to 1985, one scholarly book and three collections that includes scholarly writings and the Church official documents. Newspaper articles were available as electronic copies, and books were scanned by the author. Adobe Acrobat DC then exported those scanned documents into law text files, and NLTK functions cleaned those law texts before the learning and analyzing processes.<sup>38</sup> The details of the sources will come with each analysis of the source.

First, using New York Times (NYT) articles ranging from 1959/1/1-1982/3/1, BERTopic with multilingual transformer model<sup>39</sup> was used to extract topics from the pile of articles. ProQuest Historical Newspaper Archive was used to collect NYT articles, with a query:

Out of 270 articles, 190 articles were automatically selected as relevant articles after cleaning.

Table 2 represents the summary of the initial topic modeling results with representative words and my interpretation. In addition, a timeline analysis was conducted using the publication dates of each article to observe the evolution of each topic over time. Using the same corpus, sentiment analysis were conducted based on BERT model.<sup>40</sup> The result shows that the NYT coverage about the Church is always strongly negative, regardless of topics in their articles. timeline analysis of topics reveals a connection between cult and the Church. Topic related to the accusation towards the Church for damaging family relationship showed spikes in March and April 1977, when Californian Court ruled in favor of the Church, and then November 1978, the same month of Jonestown massacr.

WSJ articles were retrieved from factiva using the same query of NYT. There were three WSJ articles before Sun Myung Moon’s conviction, and five after the conviction. Due to the small number of articles, topic modeling and sentiment analysis could not be used to assess hypothesis. The semantic similarity analysis, shown in Table 3, implies WSJ tended to capture the image of the Chruch as a religious sect with cautious, as “brutality” found in top 10 closest words. It aligns with the consistant negative sentiment observed in NYT articles in Figure 1.

The results partially supports H1, and agrees with H2. It suggests that the media, especially NYT, depicted the Chruch negatively and tied with groups such as People’s Temple which adds the dangarous to the Chruch.

In addition, 4 scholarly and journalistic writings in a form of books were collected and scanned. Google Cloud Vision API<sup>41</sup> was used for OCR of those scanned documents, and the same bilingual language model as previous analysis in English were used to accompany topic modeling, sentiment, and semantic similarity analyses.

The result of topic modeling analysis of newspaper articles reveals that the most frequent topic of two newspapers were shown in Table 4 and 5. The most frequent topic of Asahi strongly related to political and legal terms such as Prime Minister and court order, and of Nikkei also related to court order and asking questions based on Religious Corporations Act.<sup>42</sup> In terms of sentiment scores, it is clear that the negative articles were more explicitly related to political terms such as ‘Prime Minister’ or ‘approval ratings.’ In contrast, there were many positive articles delivering the activities and press releases of the Church in response to the ‘spiritual fraud’ or ‘political involvement.’ It is assumed that the newspapers in Japan took a nuanced

Comparative interpretation of data from two countries

The comparative analysis of semantic similarity reveals a fundamental rupture in how the Unification Church is conceptualized in the Japanese media sphere compared to the United States. The data strongly supports the hypothesis that while Japan frames the group as a political entity, the U.S. frames it within the context of "cult" deviance and theology.

In the analysis of the Asahi Shimbun dataset, the semantic field surrounding "Old Unification Church" (kyū-tōitsu kyōkai) is heavily populated by terminology belonging to the political establishment. The highest cosine similarity scores were observed in terms such as "party member" (tōin, 0.953), "party leader" (tōshu, 0.951), and "incumbent bureaucrat" (genkan, 0.950). This suggests that in the Japanese discursive space, the Church is constructed not primarily as a faith community, but as an external political apparatus or pressure group deeply embedded in the logic of Nagata-cho. Furthermore, the high semantic proximity to "Soka Gakkai" (0.952) implies that the Church is being categorized functionally—viewed through its role as a "political support base" similar to Komeito's parent organization, rather than through its doctrinal content.

In stark contrast, the Wall Street Journal data frames the group through the lens of social and theological deviation. The high-ranking similarity vectors for "theology" (0.988), "fellowship" (0.986), and "brutality" (0.985) situate the discourse squarely within the "cult" paradigm. Unlike the Japanese context, where specific political labels (e.g., "Republican" or "Conservative") are absent from the top tiers of similarity despite the Church's known political alignments in the U.S., the American discourse focuses on the group's internal dogmas and its friction with civil society. Thus, the "Unification Church" in Japan is a political scandal, whereas in the U.S., it remains a theological or social controversy.

The longitudinal analysis of topic evolution in Japan provides robust support for the hypothesis that "Freedom of Religion" is rarely discussed as an autonomous or absolute right, but is instead structurally subordinated to the concept of "Public Welfare."

Within the dominant media topics surrounding the dissolution order, the concept of religious freedom does not appear as a defense of inner belief. Rather, it is inextricably linked to the "harm" caused to the public. The topic keywords show a clear pattern where "freedom of religion" is juxtaposed against terms such as "severe public harm" (ichijirushii kōkyō no fukushi o gaisuru) and "tortious acts" (fuhō kōi). This indicates a discursive shift where the media has successfully reframed the Unification Church issue from a constitutional debate regarding the separation of church and state to a consumer protection issue regarding "spiritual sales" (reikan shōhō) and victim relief.

Consequently, the narrative established in the Japanese press suggests that the "rights" of the religious organization are valid only insofar as they do not infringe upon the "public interest." By focusing on the magnitude of financial damage and the "organized nature" of the fundraising methods, the media discourse legitimizes the restriction of religious rights, positioning the dissolution order not as state overreach, but as a necessary intervention to restore public safety. This stands in contrast to the U.S. context, where the "freedom of religion" is often semantically linked to individual civil liberties, making state intervention a more contentious proposition.

Limitations

this research has several limitations. Regarding technical aspect, the use of Multilingual BERT and multilingual Transformer model. Also, parameters optimization is needed.

In terms of statistical limitation, not enough data collection to run analysis with confidence. As a result, not capturing entire image of the Unification Church and its affiliated groups. Finally, methodological limitation is lack of focus on legal documents to connect to religious freedom.
